Starting with the first store in 1930 with the name "Family mart" was born with a sincere desire that the customers of the company system of franchised stores of Family mart will grow as a family and not stop making efforts to become a better living infrastructure provider and work hard to meet the diverse needs of our customers with the changing structure of society. At the same time, he is determined to adjust the business model to promote the profit characteristics of nearby stores.

VinMart is the retail chain brand of Vingroup, a leading multinational economic group in Vietnam and in the region. In the spirit of sustainable and professional development with the motto "For the quality of life of every home", VinMart system gives consumers a diverse choice of goods and services to meet the needs of shopping from affordable to high-end customers. 2. Theoretical framework

2.1. Branding

Branding is the process of including creating a name and image for your product in the minds of customers, primarily through highly consistent advertising campaigns. The branding aims to show a clear and differentiated market in order to attract attention as well as maintain relationships with customers. A brand is a definite entity that creates certain value commitments:

Reality (Entity): According to the online dictionary Meriam Webster, the entity is "something separate and distinct."

Identifiable: That is, by that way, you can easily distinguish an object from similar objects. Usually, it is an element, color or a symbol (symbol - logo) that you can see.

Specific Promises: This term may sound strange, but not necessarily naughty. A product or service is always associated with the requirements of the value it brings to the buyer. These requirements whether they are quality requests, punctual delivery, tax exemptions or a decent, gentle illness by a particular dentist are all commitments.

Value: In any way, whatever you buy must be something you care about. Logically, if you are living in an apartment in New York, you can take advantage of the value of a plow, no matter how much power it has. However, you will realize the immense value of a laundress who will bring laundry to your home. The cleaner with a pledge to bring you clothes from 7 pm to 9 pm, after you get home from work, will definitely be more valuable than a Laundromat who only delivers goods during office hours.

Brand management is an interesting business area. The brand has its own life and reflects the attitude, competence and skills of brand managers. It seems that the brand is the crystallization of the best and the worst that we can offer to our customers and that is enough for any talented brand manager, or rather, anyone. In the company that affects the brand, have to think about it. Brand management has been used to refer to the design of a specific organizational structure and the work responsibilities stemming from it. The brand management structure is the result of large companies needing a logical method to manage their different types of products. Each brand or product circle has its own products, sales, and expenses. Therefore, each brand will have a main team to coordinate the work ^[5]. Brand management is a process that controls all issues related to the way brands speak, do and be perceived to show target customers what the company wants them to see about the brand, i.e. specify what the company wants the brand to represent and how it should be positioned so that it can be different and better than competing brands. This requires the integration of the media and the constant monitoring of the company's brand as well as its competitors. Brand management involves the strategic decisions that marketers must make over time. Strategic brand management aims to build, maintain and develop brand assets. One of the most difficult parts of brand management is creating a balance between the short-term results given by senior executives to satisfy shareholder demand with the brand's long-term growth ^[4].

need and the tools to respond immediately to what they want at that moment.
